It is 1820 and Helen goes to the English countryside to stay with her Aunt and complete her recovery. Her Aunt has another motive in mind; matchmaking.

The county set includes the Franklins. James is the elder son, rich, handsome and very eligible. Just the sort of match Helen should make. But he is boorish, arrogant and a drunkard. His younger brother, Charles, is the butt of all of James' barbed remarks. Charles was injured in battle. But this infirmity, to James, is nothing more than weakness.

What will Helen do? Go for money and position and thus secure her future and that of her family or let her heart lead the way?
