Falling from Grace: My journey delving into the deception behind Sen. John McCain's Indian Affairs Committee Hearings on Jack Abramoff's Lobbying Susan Bradford

In 2006, Susan Bradford sensed that something was amiss in the nation's depiction of Republican superlobbyist Jack Abramoff. Surely this man wasn't the villain everyone was making him out to be. Something else must be going on. The political establishment had turned on one of its own, but why? The source of all the controversy stemmed from Indian Country, where Abramoff was blocking new casinos from entering the coveted markets of his wealthy tribal clients. In an effort to remove Abramoff from power a scandal was hatched, led by Scott Reed, a fundraiser for Sen. John McCain who held hearings in the Indian Affairs Committee where witnesses lied under oath and Abramoff was wrongfully set up for criminal indictment. The hearings were designed, as the Chairman, Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell said, to serve as "the court of public opinion." Could this entire scandal have been manufactured by casino interests to remove a powerful obstruction to its wider financial interests? Not so fast. There is more. As Bradford descends into the rabbit hole of the Abramoff controversy, she uncovers a web of financial interests she had not even anticipated which had designs on Abramoff's clients. Worse, his own employer, Greenberg Traurig, appears to have been in on the scheme. Nothing is as it appears as Bradford endeavors to get to the bottom of the Abramoff scandal to determine who really orchestrated this incredible takedown of a powerful lobbyist and why. The answers she uncovers will shock the nation.
